The Bill of Rights: Its History and its Significance

What is The Bill of Rights? Why were the Bill or Rights enacted? How should they be interpreted?

Introduction & History of the Bill of Rights

The original Constitution, as proposed in 1787 in Philadelphia and as ratified by the states, contained very few individual rights guarantees, as the framers were primarily focused on establishing the machinery for an effective federal government. A proposal by delegate Charles Pinckney to include several rights guarantees (including "liberty of the press" and a ban on quartering soldiers in private homes) was submitted to the Committee on Detail on August 20, 1787, but the Committee did not adopt any of Pinckney's recommendations. The matter came up before the Convention on September 12, 1787 and, following a brief debate, proposals to include a Bill of Rights in the Constitution were rejected. As adopted, the Constitution included only a few specific rights guarantees: protection against states impairing the obligation of contracts (Art. I, Section 10), provisions that prohibit both the federal and state governments from enforcing ex post facto laws (laws that allow punishment for an action that was not criminal at the time it was undertaken) and provisions barring bills of attainder (legislative determinations of guilt and punishment) (Art. I, Sections 9 and 10). The framers, and notably James Madison, its principal architect, (continued on page 16)

Admissions counselors will oftentimes enroll veteran and military students in my classes because of my past military experience and the need to identify with that cohort group of students.

Lyle Gibson was inducted into the National Society Sons of the American Revolution; Kansas Society, Delaware Crossing Chapter in August of 2006, through documented lineage to his patriot ancestor Charles Sansing--contributing and donating supplies to advance the American Revolution. ### Black Powder Pistol Raffle

This Black powder Pistol is modeled after the one George Washington owned. It is a working gun completed with instructions. It is being raffled at $10 a ticket or 3 for $25. The drawing will be at the 2013 KSSSAR Annual Conference with money going to the Kansas Heritage Youth Fund. So far $700 in tickets have been sold. Anyone interested in owning such a fine pistol contact Dave Comer or your chapter president.

Instructions to the owner

This pistol was made to be shot and can be very accurate. The barrel has been proofed with 60 grs

Use .530 pure lead round balls with .015 patching or thicker. Pillow ticking works good also. It comes in about .018 thicknesses. Patches can be brought pre cut and dry or lubed or use 100% pure cotton tight weaved cloth. Balls can be brought or molded with the mold provided. Lubricant: there are many brands out there but the best for plain plinking is human saliva.

Loading and safety instructions are provided in the additional instructions.

Load and clean the barrel with the long start provided. It is easier to load and clean with than using the ramrod that is part of the pistol.

The cleaning of your pistol should be done within 24 hour after shooting the pistol. Use plain water to clean your pistol. Clean off all fowling carbon. If not, the gun barrel bore will rust. Remove the lock and plug the touch hole with a tooth pick. Force water out through the touch hole by ramming a cleaning patch on the jag of the long start. That forces the fowling out of the cone in the touchhole. Clean the inside of the lock. Then oil all metal surfaces and down the bore to prevent rusting. Reassemble the pistol.

I have zeroed the pistol at about 25 yds but the owner may have to adjust the front sight to their selves by drifting the sight left or right for windage and filing down the front sight for elevation.

If the ball hits to the left drift the sight to the left. If the ball hits low when shot, file down the front sight a little at a time.

Do not file or move the rear sight.

One French amber flint is included with the pistol and it is in the cock jaws of the lock. Replacement flints either French or English can be purchased from Track of the Wolf.com and the size needed is for a small Siler flintlock or 5/8". French flints are amber and last longer. English flints are dark grayish black. Any question please contact me at 785-258-2886 or e-mail at groh\_g@msn.com Enjoy your pistol either by shooting it or just displaying it on the mantel.

Your servant.

Gary Groh

of FFF black powder and two patched round balls. It has a light BUT safe trigger pull.

Use only FFF black powder for both the main charge and priming. Some shooters like FFFF BP for priming but FFF BP will work just the same. That is what I have used for years. DO NOT use smokeless (your barrel will turn into a bomb) or black powder substitutes. Pyrodex will NOT ignite when used as priming powder. SO stay with black powder only.

The suggested charge is about 30 grs or less. The flask provided throws 15 gr charges. There is no need to load higher than the proof load. You will only waste your powder. The lighter the load the more accurate your shots will be.

KNOW YE THAT:

Posted Fri, 2012-05-25 09:00 by SAR.ORG webmaster

Last updated: Fri, 2012-05-25 10:06

Eight centuries ago, your ancestor, a gallant knight, came with a group of knights as gallant as he, to challenge King John and to wrest from him the crushed liberties of his Anglo-Saxon subjects.

In the meadow of Runnemede they assembled, dauntless and determined. This place had for generations been a favorite meeting place of kings in council and was, in 1215, already a memorable spot. Here under an ancient and venerated oak, whose boughs and branches had looked down on the ceremonies of Druids, at a spot where the valley of the Thames widens out in quiet beauty, the Saxon kings had been wont to gather their people about them to discuss questions of more than usual importance.

On the side of the Barons came a great concourse of the nobility of England. With the King came some four-and-twenty-persons, most of whom despised him, and were merely his advisers in form.

The Barons embodied their demands in the form of a Royal Grant. When the draft was read out to him, John swore furiously. But the only alternative was the loss of his kingdom. So, on that great day, and in that great company, the King conceded, and solemnly set his seal to Magna Charta.

In doing so, he pledged himself:

1. To maintain the Church in its rights
2. To relieve the Barons of oppressive obligations as vassals of the crown—of which the Barons, in their turn, pledged themselves to relieve their vassals, THE PEOPLE
3. To respect the liberties of London and all other cities and boroughs
4. To protect foreign merchants who came to England
5. To imprison no man without a fair trial

To sell, delay, or deny justice to none.

As the Barons knew his falsehood well, they further required as their securities:

1. That he should send out of his kingdom all his foreign troops
2. That for two months they should hold possession of the city of London
3. That five-and-twenty of their body, chosen by themselves, should be a lawful committee to watch the keeping of the charter, and

To make war upon him if he broke it.

All this he was obliged to yield. He sealed the charter and departed from that splendid assembly. When he got home to Windsor Castle, it is said he was quite a madman in his helpless fury.

One may not change the intellectual or spiritual qualities of his ancestors, but may emulate those that were worthy, and lay foundation for the most exalted characteristics among his descendants.

Shall we be careless of this heritage?

Shall we not prize and honor it?

Shall we not hold it as a sacred trust from which glorious results shall continue to stimulate the world?

Lest the world forget, let us pause and remember:

The Barons' success changed the outlook for all mankind, and the lineal descendants of those knights brought later to America the priceless results of that day, and so handed down this heritage to their descendants, keeping alive the memory and spirit of

Ancestry.com Supports the NSSAR Operation Ancestor Search

Ancestry.com, the world's largest online family history resource, and Fold3, the web's premier collection of original military records, presented a grant of $180,000 to the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution for the development and support of Operation Ancestor Search, a genealogy training program provided to US wounded warriors, their families and care givers. Brian Hansen, general manager of Fold3, presented the check on behalf of Fold3 and Ancestry.com during the 122nd Congress of The Sons of the American Revolution in Phoenix, Arizona.

Conducted at military hospitals around the country, Operation Ancestor Search is free to U.S. wounded warriors, their families and care givers and it is operated by volunteers from local chapters of the Sons of the American Revolution. Operation Ancestor Search provides injured service members with the knowledge and tools that enable them to conduct family history research as they recover from their injuries. A key aspect of the program is the ability to offer genealogy resources to the injured service members, and this grant will provide access to Ancestry.com's online databases for the participants' use as well as funding for a national program administrator.

The program is a tremendous success at military healthcare facilities including the Walter Reed and Brooke Army Medical Centers. Captain Samuel Hoffman, U.S. Army, has participated in the program at Walter Reed since early 2011. Through the assistance of Operation Ancestor Search volunteers, Captain Hoffman discovered his ancestors served on both sides of the Civil War and also in the Revolutionary War.

“The information I have uncovered about my family through Operation Ancestor Search has helped me learn a tremendous amount about my ancestors and exceeded my expectations,” said Captain Hoffman. “I have a new found respect and understanding for family heritage and the impact that family history can have on a person’s sense of self-worth and desire for personal growth.”

More information regarding this program will be forthcoming as plans are finalized.

NBC's acclaimed alternative series "Who Do You Think You Are?" follows some of today's most beloved and iconic celebrities as they embark on personal journeys of self-discovery to trace their family trees. From Ireland's freedom fighters to the American Revolutionary War, and from the African nation of Cameroon to Bulgaria, this season will reveal the fabric of humanity through everyone's place in history.

The celebrities featured in the third season are Martin Sheen, Marisa Tomei, Blair Underwood, Helen Hunt, Reba McEntire, Jerome Bettis, Rita Wilson, Edie Falco, Rob Lowe, Rashida Jones, Jason Sudeikis and Paula Deen.

During each episode, one of the celebrities is taken on a surprising and deeply emotional quest into his or her family history, resulting in a compelling reality format. Each week, viewers follow some of America's best-known celebrities into their ancestral pasts, as they uncover stories of heroism and tragedy, love and betrayal, secrets and intrigue that lie at the heart of their family history.

At the same time, "Who Do You Think You Are?" celebrates the twists and turns of a great nation and the people who made their way here in search of freedom and opportunity. As each celebrity discovers his or her unknown relatives - most of whom overcame hard times, the show will take viewers back through world history to expose how the lives of everyone's collective ancestors have shaped our world today.

From executive producers Lisa Kudrow ("Friends,"

"Web Therapy") and Dan Bucatinsky ("Lipstick Jungle," "The Comeback") in conjunction with their production company, Is or Isn't Entertainment, and Shed Media U.S., the series is an adaptation of the award-winning hit British television documentary series from Wall to Wall Productions, created and executive-produced by Alex Graham. Jennifer O'Connell and Al Edgington also serve as executive producers.

The program contacted the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution as part of the presentation for the celebrity Rob Lowe

Without Liberty, No Other Human Values Are Possible

Liberty is the freedom to act as you please so long as you don't coerce others. Liberty means you can associate with others voluntarily, you can speak and publish freely, you can practice the religion of your choice (or none at all), keep what you earn, run your own business, and love and live as you please (so long as you don't violate the rights of others).

We need liberty to think, to create, and to fulfill our individual and unique potential. Liberty is as much a requirement of our psychological nature as food and air are requirements of our biological nature. When liberty is denied, economies stagnate, cultures deteriorate, science declines, living standards fall, and the human spirit languishes. Liberty is essential for any decent and humane society.

Liberty is such a compelling and important value that even brutal dictatorships claim to support it. Tyrants say they are promoting "higher" freedoms – such as "national security", "economic equality", or "the common good." The graveyards of history are filled with the corpses of those deceived by such claims.

The Soviet Union, Communist China, Nazi Germany and other totalitarian nations, murdered and tortured over 100 million people in the name of "economic equality" and "the common good". Even the United States imprisoned over 115,000 Americans of Japanese descent during World War II in the name of "national security."

As Benjamin Franklin observed in 1759, those who give up their liberty in exchange for government promises of security, end up with neither liberty nor security.

Countries which deny liberty to their citizens are the most brutal, poor, and miserable places on earth. In the end, tyrannies fail because they are based upon coercion, and coercion is fundamentally incompatible with human nature

Coercion vs. Voluntary Association

We need others for most of what we want out of life: companionship, friendship, family, recreation, and wealth. A hermit living alone on a desert island may be able to survive, but his living standard and lifestyle will be little better than that of an animal. There are only two basic ways of getting what you want from others: voluntarily or coercively. When you deal with others voluntarily, others deal with you because they want to, because they receive some benefit – material or psychological – by dealing with you. The tools of voluntarism are friendship, trade, compassion, and love. In coercive association, you get what you want from others by deception or fear. The tools of coercion are intimidation, threats, fraud, and physical violence. Voluntary association promotes trust and respect, and provides benefits for everyone. Coercive association creates fear and distrust, and victimizes some at the expense of others. A guiding

Freedom Is Practical As Well As Moral

Socialists often argue that liberty won't feed a starving man – implying that liberty is less important than government-guaranteed security. But it is the absence of liberty that produces starvation and poverty. The freer a country, the more prosperous it is. The poorest, most miserable countries in the world – Cuba, North Korea, Iran, Iraq, etc. – have an abundance only of government promises, fear, and suffering.

believed that the Constitution protected liberty primarily through its division of powers that made it difficult for an oppressive majority to form and capture power to be used against minorities. Delegates also probably feared that a debate over liberty guarantees might prolong or even threaten the fiercely-debated compromises that had been made over the long hot summer of 1787. In the ratification debate, Anti-Federalists opposed to the Constitution, complained that the new system threatened liberties, and suggested that if the delegates had truly cared about protecting individual rights, they would have included provisions that accomplished that. With ratification in serious doubt, Federalists announced a willingness to take up the matter of a series of amendments, to be called the Bill of Rights, soon after ratification and the First Congress comes into session. The concession was undoubtedly necessary to secure the Constitution's hard-fought ratification. Thomas Jefferson, who did not attend the Constitutional Convention, in a December 1787 letter to Madison called the omission of a Bill of Rights a major mistake: "A bill of rights is what the people are entitled to against every government on earth."

of rights, calling it a "parchment barrier." (Madison's preference at the Convention to safeguard liberties was by giving Congress an unlimited veto over state laws and creating a joint executive-judicial council of revision that could veto federal laws.) Despite his skepticism, by the fall of 1788, Madison believed that a declaration of rights should be added to the Constitution. Its value, in Madison's view, was in part educational, in part as a vehicle that might be used to rally people against a future oppressive government, and finally--in an argument borrowed from Thomas Jefferson--Madison argued that a declaration of rights would help install the judiciary as "guardians" of individual rights against the other branches. When the First Congress met in 1789, James Madison, a congressman from Virginia, took upon himself the task of drafting a proposed Bill of Rights. He considered his efforts "a nauseous project." His original set of proposed amendments included some that were either rejected or substantially modified by Congress, and one (dealing with apportionment of the House) that was not ratified by the required three-fourths of the state legislatures. Some of the rejections were very significant, such as the decision not to adopt Madison's proposal to extend free speech protections to the states, and others somewhat less important (such as the dropping of Madison's language that required unanimous jury verdicts for convictions in all federal cases).

Some members of Congress argued that a listing of rights of the people was a silly exercise, in that all the listed rights inherently belonged to citizens, and nothing in the Constitution gave the Congress the power to take them away. It was even suggested that the Bill of Rights might reduce liberty by giving force to the argument that all rights not specifically listed could be infringed upon. In part to counter this concern, the Ninth Amendment was included providing that "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage other rights retained by the people."

Decades later, the Ninth Amendment would be pointed to by some judges, such as Justice Goldberg in his opinion in Griswold v Connecticut (a case recognizing a right of privacy that included a right to use contraceptives), as a justification for giving a broad and liberty-protective reading to the specifically enumerated rights. Others, such as rejected Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork, would dismiss the Ninth Amendment as analogous to "an inkblot on the Constitution," a provision so unclear in its significance that judges should essentially read it out of the Constitution. Most of the protections of the Bill of Rights eventually would be extended to state infringements as well federal infringements though the "doctrine of incorporation" beginning in the early to mid-1900s. The doctrine rests on interpreting the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment as prohibiting states from infringing on the most fundamental liberties of its citizens. (For more, see page on INCORPORATION DEBATE.) In the end, we owe opponents of the Constitution a debt of gratitude, for without their complaints, there would be no Bill of Rights. Thomas Jefferson wrote, "There has just been opposition enough" to force adoption of a Bill of Rights, but not to drain the federal government of its essential "energy." George Washington agreed: "They have given the rights of man a full and fair discussion, and explained them in so clear and forcible manner as cannot fail to make a lasting impression."

Resolution of the First Congress Submitting Twelve Amendments to the Constitution (March 4, 1789)

The Rejected Rights Guarantees Included in James Madison's Original Bill of Rights:

1. "No person religiously scrupulous of bearing arms shall be compelled to render military service in person."
2. "No State shall violate the equal rights of conscience, or the freedom of the press, or the trial by jury in criminal cases." [Madison called this guarantee, extending protections of the First Amendment and the jury trial right of the Sixth Amendment to the states, "the most valuable amendment in the whole lot." It passed the House, but was rejected by the Senate.]

He spoke to God, and this is what he said: "God Bless my men, who now lie dead; I know not what You have in mind, but when You judge, please be kind. Whey they come before you, they will be poorly dressed but will walk proudly, for they have done their best.

Their boots will be muddy and their clothes all torn, but these clothes they have so proudly worn. Their hearts will be still and cold inside, for they have fought their best and did so with pride.

So please take care of them as they pass Your way, for the price of freedom."

Amendment V

Amendment VIII
